

Get Your Love Back With Sexy herbs that deliver that 'aphrodesiac effect'

Libido is loosely defined as sex drive. Originally (from the Latin) libido was defined as 'desire' or 'lust'. With the advent of drugs like Viagra, the term has come to represent the sexual performance of the male. Alas, there is no 'Viagra' for women.

In reality a number of factors affect your sex drive.

How you feel about yourself and your partner has a huge effect on performance. Yes, we are discussing a physical activity. The goal is to enhance the performance and pleasure of both participants.

Your age affects your sex drive. Male and female hormone levels decline as you age. Well, all hormones decline with age. Your medical condition and medications have a striking effect on your pleasure. Of the two, medication side effects have the worst effect. Please discuss the side effects of all your medications with your pharmacist.

You owe it to yourself and your partner to be as healthy as you possibly can be. To that end we recommend the 'Basic Protocol' by John W Jones, MD.

We recommend essential fatty acids - one of the better ways to improve your libido. Ultra Omega Linic supplies prostaglandin precursors. Prostaglandins were first isolated from seminal fluid (from the prostate gland) in 1935 by a Swedish physiologist (bet you didn't know that).

Since that time many studies have looked at these active hormone-like lipids. Fish oil has been promoted for heart health. Everyone wants a healthy heart! The 'side effects' of taking Ultra Omega-Linic include a healthy brain, less trouble with arthritis, shiny hair, glowing skin, and a healthy 'libido'.

A number of herbs are said to provide a 'natural' alternative to viagra. One discussion I read said that a particular herb was a good alternative - provided you spent lots of money to buy the very pure form, and you took lots of it. Another discussion stated that no herbs do what Viagra does. But what if you don't want to take the drug?

Fem-Ease capsules and Fem-Ease cream help stabilize the hormone levels for women. Both of these products have wild yam, a precursor of progesterone.

We have two other herbal products that merit your consideration. PhytoAmore capsules and PhytoAmore Oil. The oil is suitable for full body massage, yet it is gentle enough for sensitive areas. What could be more exciting than a massage with essential oils?

The capsules, with their special blend of herbs to boost libido, are best if taken daily - and two hours before intimacy. They also help sexual dysfunction problems.

And feedback from those who have used PhytoAmore (men & women) has been - well - very satisfactory.

These approaches are a lot more fun with better 'side effects' for men and women.
